ORUS 1843-3 the wild and sticky meets the thornless and smooth. It is an incredible find for the backyard garden or the out-door patio. Oregon State University researchers have crossed the uniquely delicious flavor of the Cascade Trailing Blackberry with a thornless variety to make a self-fertile selection perfect for your garden. Crossed with the Thornless Waldo variety, the cultivars selected are very productive and so sweet and delicious they win and amaze every tasting panel. They average two grams in weight, about 1/3 the size of a Marionberry but more than twice the size of its wild cousin. Wild Treasure is used in baking products do to its small seeds, aromatic tones and outstanding flavor.

Cultural Tips For The Successful Grower

WILD TREASURE

Planting Instructions: A wide variety of plants can be grown in containers when desired for reasons of limited space, poor soil, need to be mobile or when growing tender plants that need to be brought under cover during winter. Plants in containers can also make a beautiful specimen for a deck or patio and tend to be smaller or more compact than when grown in the open ground.*It is best to start plants in mid-sized containers and pot them on to larger ones as their roots begin to crowd. Eventually after being in their final container for a while they may get root-bound and begin to decline. They will then need to be taken out of their pots, have their roots trimmed and be re-potted with fresh potting soil. Non-porous containers such as wooden tubs or plastic pots are the best and always use a high quality organic potting soil. You can make your own by mixing 1/3 peat--moss, 1/3 perlite and 1/3 well decomposed compost. Potted plants need to be fertilized more frequently than plants in the ground. We suggest a good slow release organic powdered blend worked into the soil surface and regular liquid fish-seaweed feedings.
